THE INDEPENDENT CORPS OF CADETS.

THE INDEPENDENT CORPS OF CADETS, so called at the breaking out of the Civil War, is a military organization with a record dating back to 1711, when it was first appointed Body Guard to Governor Shirley, of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, with the title of Governor's Company of Cadets, having three commissioned, ranking as field officers, after the English fashion of the day.

It was then, as now, composed of men of good standing and influence in the community, high-spirited and manly and quick to resent an affront. When, at the time of the Revolution, Governor Gage dismissed Colonel John Hancock from the command, owing it was believed to a difference in political views, the corps returned the standard the Governor had presented them, with the expressed intention of retiring from His Excellency's service, since they considered the dismissal of their colonel the same as disbandment of the corps.

As a military company they took no part in the Revolutionary struggle, prior to the evacuation of Boston by the British troops, when having been reorganized as the Independent Company, under the command of Colonel Hitchborn, two years later they marched to Rhode Island to join the Revolutionary forces.

After the establishment of the State government they became a part of the State militia and were again appointed and became permanently the Governor's Body Guard, enjoying three great privileges: first, that of being the Governor's Guard of Honor; second, the inability to be attached to any body of troops commanded by an officer beneath a Major-General in rank; lastly, the peculiar rank held by its officers; all of which privileges were subsequently protected by United States law.

Following the old usage, the Governor presented a standard having the arms of the company, a six-pointed star with the motto "Monstrat Viam," upon one side, upon the other, his personal armorial bearings. Governor Hancock afterwards substituted the State for family arms, and the arms of Governors Shirley and Bowdoin united, found use as the seal of the company.

The chief distinguishing marks of their old organization have ever been preserved; only such changes having been made as were deemed necessary for the good of the corps. The battalion system has been established; the number and rank of officers in the line has been increased, and full in place of inferred rank bestowed upon the field officers. But this corps and that of the Salem, or Second Corps of Cadets, are the only military bodies in the present Massachusetts Volunteer Militia which have had a continuous existence since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States.

THE CADETS AT FORT WARREN.

IN May, 1862, after the Civil War had been a year in progress, and Major-General Banks had been defeated in the Shenandoah Valley and driven back to Harper's Ferry, President Lincoln issued a proclamation calling for more troops for the seat of war. In accordance therewith, the entire militia of Massachusetts was called out by Governor Andrew, and an order, a copy of which is given below, was received by Quartermaster Raymond, of the Independent Corps of Cadets, which was at once forwarded to the Commander, Colonel Holmes, who called a meeting of the corps in their armory at twelve o'clock on Monday, May 26.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

HEAD-QUARTERS, BOSTON, May 26, 1862.

SPECIAL ORDER No. 94. — The Companies of Cadets of the First and Second Divisions of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia are ordered to report forthwith for active service to Col. Dimmick, U.S.A., commanding at Fort Warren in Boston Harbor.

Quartermaster General Reed will furnish the necessary transportation.

By command of His Excellency John A. Andrew, Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

(Signed)

WILLIAM SCHOLLER,

Adjutant-General.

The North was a seething caldron of excitement at this time. The air was rife with rumors, all more or less exaggerated, and the call in the churches the previous day for lint, bandages, cordials, and all hospital stores available, to be forwarded to the seat of war for immediate use, and the dismissal of congregations for their preparation, had produced a panic of government assistance. Sidewalks were piled with cases awaiting transportation in addition to large amounts already forwarded. The Tremont House contribution alone would have been a revelation to the people of to-day. Every patriotic individual was in a hurry of excitement, and while the enthusiasm was at its height, the Independent Corps of Cadets assembled at their armory, then in the third story of a building opposite the old Granary burial-grounds, ninety-four strong, including their officers, Colonel C. C. Holmes commanding.

In their handsome gray uniforms gayly decorated with red, accustomed to the refinements of life, and somewhat lacking in the muscular development of practised soldiers, they hardly looked in condition to fight the battles of their country; nevertheless, from this body of men and through their influence, beside the personal services they were about to render, and generally gratuitous at that, afterwards arose a fine regiment, the 45th Massachusetts Volunteers, which served nine months at the seat of war, and all this beside more than one hundred and fifty commissioned officers furnished the army.

So it cannot be said that this fine company was wanting in patriotism, or shrank from the performance of duty in time of need.

This membership of ninety-four was permitted to be raised to one hundred. Accordingly, several young men took advantage of the opportunity that morning, having drilled with ardor for months previous, hoping for just such a chance. No unnecessary questions were asked, but all were duly sworn into the service of the United States by Captain J. M. Goodhue, U.S.A., and ordered to pack their knapsacks with a few essential articles and report at the armory, at five o'clock that afternoon.

Accordingly, at the time appointed, they assembled and marched to Long wharf, one hundred and three strong, including the drummers, embarking on the "tug of war," as some one facetiously called it.

Upon landing at Fort Warren, Colonel Dimmick was much astonished at the gay appearance of the corps, and the high rank of its officers, asking in some disdain, "What military body this might be, one hundred men commanded by a Colonel having two Majors, an Adjutant, and a large number of officers of the line!" Perhaps it will not be amiss to mention in this connection his remark when, their duties accomplished, they took leave of him previous to their return to Boston: "Gentlemen, I thank you for all you have done for us. I am sorry to part with you."

The work of garrison duty to which they had been assigned in place of the First Battalion of Infantry, sent to the front, was not arduous but extremely monotonous: still it was of much consequence, as the fort held at that time some seven hundred prisoners, among whom were Generals Buckner, Tighlman and McCull, "the French Lady," Barron, the famous Marshall Kane, and Mayor Brown of Baltimore. Moreover, there were constant reports of plots and plans for the destruction of all prominent cities on the sea-board, particularly Boston.

The Quartermaster, Lieutenant C. B. Raymond, with admirable forethought, had provided the corps with the services of a Boston caterer quite famous at that time, so that the creature comforts were not wanting for the inner man, however uncomfortable the outer one might be. This arrangement exposed the members to much bantering on the part of their friends, who were only appeased by the statement,—"pon honor," that they only had tin plates and crockery of the plainest fashion to use.

Soon after their arrival, as United States soldiers they were obliged to lay aside their showy uniforms, and accept the "goods the gods provided," in the shape of the blue coats and brass buttons of "Uncle Sam." The Post Quartermaster's Headquarters were the rendezvous for the corps, each one anxious for the best garments. All the small men obtained the large sizes, and vice versa; but at last every one was suited or affected to be, and tradition reports Corporal Dennet to have met with unparalleled success.

Finding the accommodations at the Fortress would warrant an increase of their number, through the efforts of Lieutenant Sturgis and others, an addition of thirteen men was soon made, recruited for active duty at the Fort only.

Perhaps one of their most disagreeable tasks was the preparation of the casemates for occupation. Wooden bunks, three in a tier, were hardly in accordance with preconceived ideas as suitable places for wooing balmy sleep. The casemates were also found to be in anything but an agreeable condition; however, United States soldiers could not be over-scrupulous; work was to be done;—the Cadets did it well, and manfully removed the superfluous possessions of their predecessors, then selecting their mattresses, turned in.

Sleep in a crowded casemate upon a hard bed, cannot always be considered a luxury, with two hours on and four off guard, and the consequent disturbance. To some poor fellows it was indeed a time of penance. It is said, one Cadet once actnally drove all his companions out of doors by his heavy breathing; he, at least, was to be congratulated upon his ability to overcome difficulties.

With the break of day and the beating of the reveille on Tuesday morning came all the discipline of camp life in the regular army. Capt. C. R. Codman had the first honor as Officer of the Day, and work began in earnest. Policing the Fort was a most distasteful duty for the Cadets to perform, nevertheless it was thoroughly done and a grand example set for the "regulars" to follow. A notable ex-congressman is reported to have displayed much energy in disposing of the refuse, and probably the work was never more satisfactorily accomplished than during this régime.

Guard duty also, with all its tediousness, was well done, no prisoner escaping, and no one being reported as sleeping at his post. This duty, however, was not without incidents to relieve it.

One night the sentry at the guard-house received an alarm from an outpost, in consequence of the discharge of a musket about nine o'clock P.M., which was found to have been fired from a boat, and subsequently a dory with some half-dozen men appeared, who seemed to be attempting to effect a landing at the wharf, but being warned off, reluctantly retired.

At midnight, on another occasion, a sentry stationed at the extreme point of the island, deceived by the darkness and swell of the tide, fired his musket at what he supposed to be an escaping prisoner and the entire relief was quickly turned out, when it was discovered to have been an almost submerged rock.

And so the days sped on, the otherwise monotonous existence relieved with frequent fun and frolic, for Colonel Holmes, though he preserved good discipline, never objected to a reasonable amount of sport. He possessed a wonderful influence over his command, who well-nigh worshipped him, and not one of them but would have devotedly followed him to the cannon's mouth had they been called upon to do so.

Concerts, both vocal and instrumental, were frequent, and many will remember with pleasure the sweet voice of Private Schlesinger. Private Bryant, better known perhaps as the marker, gave some variety performances of merit also, while chess, whist, etc., received their due share of attention. Occasionally permission would be given to practise with the guns of the Fort, and probably the whole Confederate fleet was annihilated in imagination. Under the shadow of the largest of these dogs of war, many of the privates of the corps relieved the tedium of long hours, with cutting and carving rings and other trinkets from gutta-percha.

But camp, as well as civil life has its drawbacks, and the Cadets were not without their temporary crosses and vexations. To a young man accustomed to the luxuries of existence and deprived of them for the nonce, it is no small annoyance to miss a box of a favorite brand, not to mention a basket of Roederer, a dozen of Muscatel, or, say a whisper of old Bourbon, and small consolation to believe they have pleased the palate of some one deserving as lightest punishment a good sound thrashing, unfortunately escaped. Possibly an otherwise uneasy conscience was calmed with the label, "Confiscated on account of example." But a soldier's life is full of privations, and a share must be reserved for even the most favored militia-man. Occasionally, some prisoner would overstep the bounds of prudence and grossly insult the young guardsmen, though for this there was condign punishment and a dungeon cell, with an apology for his misdemeanor.

The duties and drills under regular army officers were exceedingly rigorous. One day an unfortunate Cadet, at dress-parade incurred the displeasure of the Adjutant of the Post. In consequence of the too close attention of an aggravating little fly, he raised his arm to brush the offender from his nose, and for this was consigned to the guard-house for several days: but his sentence was commuted afterwards.

One of the events of the stay of the Cadets at the Fort was a mock dress-parade. Sergeant J. T. Clark was appointed Commander, and Private J. S. Whitney, Adjutant. The amusing "General Orders" delivered on that occasion were duly appreciated, and ran as follows:—

General Orders read on Dress-Parade, June 20, 1862, by Adjutant J. S. Whitney, and composed by him.

Major-General Chessman is detailed as Officer of the Day; Brigadier-General White, Lieutenant of the Guard; Colonel Otis E. Weld and Winsor as Sergeants of the Guard.

The Commander wishes me to say to you, that the manner in which you have emptied swill-barrels, the promptness with which you have fallen in for morning drills, as well as the respect you have shown your brevet non-commissioned officers, meet his warmest approbation. In future there will be no morning drills, as it has been ascertained that the drill of the men has become much demoralized by too much exercise on an empty stomach. The usual ten o'clock drill will also be dispensed with if a majority of the men so decide. By careful count it has been ascertained that there are but two men in the entire corps who advocate the above-mentioned drill, namely:—Colonel John T. Clark and Dr. Richardson, and they will be respected accordingly.

The dinner-hour in future, will be half-past three o'clock, in consequence of which the four o'clock battalion drill will necessarily be dispensed with. The regular dress-parade will not be given up, as it affords Colonel Clark the only opportunity he has of folding his arms and assuming his present imposing position.

At the request of seventy-five men out of the sixty-six, you are to be entirely relieved from guard-duty during the night, as it has been found that the mattresses used by the men when off guard, have had the effect of softening the brains of several of the members.

Police duty will be so far modified that none will be required of you in future, the same having been handsomely volunteered by our field and staff.

For the next six months, or until discharged by the President, tattoo will sound at eleven P.M., taps at twelve, and after that, if any man has any decided objection to put out his light, he needn't do it.

Adjutant Whitney has been appointed Commander of the Post, and will be respected accordingly.

By order Colonel Clark,

J. S. WHITNEY,

Adjutant.

Perhaps the Cadets' gayest affair, however, was the Ball, for which preparations were made with great zest and the equal of which Fort Warren never witnessed before nor since. Their scanty resources were taxed to their utmost capacity, and the limited supply of daisies, buttercups, and clover was ruthlessly sacrificed for decoration.

Ladies' society was out of the question, so great efforts were made to produce fac-similes, and the attempts of some of the young men were quite satisfactory, and sources of much merriment. Misses Wellman, Inches, and Goodwin were extremely attractive, but history reports Mrs. Barlow as the "Belle of the Ball." Tradition has not handed down a very accurate account of the costumes, but we have it on very good authority that they "were cut V-shaped," and that "Miss Wellman wore a clover wreath."

Yet in spite of the fun, frolic and music, the days with their increasing heat grew irksome, and after a stay of six weeks, many, who were professional as well as active business men, began to feel the loss in their callings and became impatient to return to their customary pursuits, feeling that guard-duty might be performed equally well by others not burdened with home cares. So, when July came and with it a company of recruits to take their places, it was a great relief to be freed from the daily routine of guard-duty, the hard beds, the plain fare, and all the monotony of garrison life. Yet genuine regret was not wanting when parting with their companions-in-arms, who were liable at any time to be transferred from the Fort to meet the enemy in battle, perhaps to fall and die for their country; still there were many in the corps who would not have shrunk from such a fate, perhaps coveted it.

The Independent Corps of Cadets were mustered out of United States service July 2, 1862. With light hearts and general alacrity they set about their preparations to return, feeling that as a corps, they had accomplished satisfactorily the work given them to do.

Boston had not changed much during their absence in spite of the panics which were becoming chronic. Right lively the band poured out the strains of "Home again," and proud and soldierlike, fresh from the drill of the "regulars," marched the corps up State street amid a welcome of applause. The Common reached they went through the drill with packed knapsacks, in the broiling heat of a summer sun; but the fatigue was soon over, and, after dismissal at the armory, they scattered like a flock of birds to unite at dinner later, or revel once more in the comforts and companionships of home.

Thus ended the service of the Independent Corps of Cadets at Fort Warren; a time ever held green in the memory of many who participated. Through the efforts of a few of this body of veterans, Corporal Weld, Privates Gore and Stevens, in May, 1887, just twenty-five years after the event of their sojourn at the Fort, it was proposed to hold a reunion, which the slight canvass possible at the time proved to be a step in the right direction. A visit to the Fort was planned and Corporal Weld and Private Gore, with the assistance of all who could give intelligence, set about hunting up the veterans of '62.

It was found from the best information, that ninety-nine were still living, which brought the rate of death remarkably low. Scattered far and wide, from Maine to California, from North to South, abroad in Paris, in London, everywhere, yet all of whom tidings could be obtained in season received invitations to Boston and the anniversary celebration. Every response was enthusiastic, with a delighted acceptance, or real regret at their inability to be present.

The day was bright and beautiful for the thirty-eight members of the old corps who met on board the harbor steamer "Rose Standish," at two o'clock, May 26, 1887, and after a short round-about excursion, landed, as in days long past, at the old Fortress.

We cannot venture to say how many held only joyous memories of those days, or whether any indulged in vain regrets for them; certain it is, that the dignified gentlemen who stepped upon the landing soon permitted themselves to cast aside all unpleasant associations, if there were any, and revel in recollections of the pleasant weeks of '62. Through the courtesy of Captain G. G. Greenough, a tour of the Fort was made and all the old haunts revisited. Many were the events recalled and old stories retold while they puffed at the fragrant weed, and one by one they all faded into the past again, as the smoke faded into the clear air of the memorable day.

Having spent some pleasant hours, they took the steamer "Nantasket," chartered for the occasion, and, after a trip to Boston Light, arrived at the wharf about six o'clock, when Corporal Otis E. Weld, with royal liberality, having invited all members of the old corps to an elegant dinner at Young's Hotel, forty-two Cadets accepted.

We will not attempt to give the arrangement of the table, though we think perhaps we might succeed as well in description as the Cadets who remembered the V-shaped costumes. A handsome ménu, souvenir of the occasion, ran as follows:—

MÉNÚ.

Little Neck Clams on Shell.

SOUP.

Clear Green Turtle. Consommé Printanière.

FISH.

Penobscot Salmon. Sauce Hollandaise.

During the evening Corporal H. Richardson sang again the old-time song, "Billy Barlow," modernized to suit advanced ideas. It was pronounced a successful and most enjoyable day, to be treasured within the memories of all present.

At the conclusion of the banquet the corps received, by letter, an invitation from Private S. B. Schlesinger, of New York, to dine with him upon the anniversary the following year, which it was unanimously voted to accept.

The heliotypes of this volume, with two exceptions, are copies of photographs taken at, or near, May, 1862, the time of enlistment. While some may with superficial thought wonder at their insertion, in preference to more attractive modern ones so easily attainable, upon consideration, they will acknowledge that herein lies their charm, for these are the veritable Cadets who started full of enthusiasm and willing sacrifice on that May day so long ago.

Private Henry W. Gore, one of the youngest of the company, just able to pass muster at that time, conceived the idea of collecting and preserving in some convenient form the subject-matter contained in this book, and first distributed blanks to be filled out by the members upon the twenty-fifth anniversary. With indomitable perseverance, notwithstanding great discouragement, he has succeeded in securing the records and photographs of every Cadet at Fort Warren, with the exception of the thirteen who were recruited, and belonged but a short time, of whom no authentic account could be obtained.

The search for some members was indeed disheartening. At times the clues, often slight, would disappear altogether, but Private Gore's untiring inquiries were always rewarded in some unexpected quarter, and finally all were gathered into the present shape.

Acknowledgments are due the following gentlemen for photographs: Sergeant J. T. Clark, Sergeant A. W. Adams, Corporal O. E. Weld, Private W. H. Chessman, Private C. W. Stevens, Private E. B. Richardson, Private A. H. Hardy.

Also to relatives of deceased members, and to Capt. C. E. Stevens, Paymaster of the Cadets of to-day, and for years Clerk of the old corps, for dates of membership.

Perhaps the writer may also be permitted to modestly acknowledge Private Gore's assistance in collecting the items of this history, and thanks are offered Corporals O. E. Weld and H. Richardson, and Privates W. H. Chessman and J. P. Whitney, for notes regarding the incidents of this sketch. Necessarily brief, since it covers only the short space of six weeks, it is hoped that it may prove of especial interest to those who took part in the events chronicled, and as time goes on, to those in days to come, who shall inherit a veneration and love for the good name of the old

GOVERNOR'S BODY GUARD.

ODE

COMRADES, fill a brimming goblet,
While its depth our spirit cheers,
Like the forest leaves in Autumn
Falls the mantle of our years,
Back within the grim old fortress,
Marching as in days of yore,
Youthful hearts and high ambition
Vigorous with hope once more,—
Hopes, ambitions, born to grow,
Twenty-five long years ago.

Whitened with Time's careful counting
Locks that then held light and shade;
Thinned the ranks that once so gayly
Mustered in the grand parade,
Drop a tear for those who slumber
In their narrow bed to-day,
Give a cheer for all who linger
Still within this mortal clay,
Chimes and dirges mingled so
Twenty-five long years ago.

Here's to jolly days remembered,
Crowned within our happy thoughts;
Drink to all the soldier comrades,
Faithful to the duties taught.
Pledge we now in tender memory
One held dear through many years, —
Here's to our beloved Commander, —
While our eyes grow dim with tears
Recollections ebb and flow
Of the years so long ago.
